Strategy Proposes to Pay STRC Dividends Semi-Monthly

Natalie Brunell: Well, you bring up something that's happening right now, which is that shareholders for Strategy are considering moving to semi-monthly payments, right? So every couple of weeks you'll get those dividends instead of just once a month. Most dividend-paying stocks pay quarterly, right? So can you talk to me about Strategy's move with Stretch — and is that something that makes it even more attractive to you?

Ben Honeywell: Yeah. From a company treasury perspective, the guidelines that we had in place — we still have in place for STRC — is you have funds that are not going to be deployed for operational use. It's more than like 60 days. So 45 to 60 days out. And the logic behind that is, with a high degree of certainty, that you could extract a large amount of liquidity out of Treasury and out of STRC on the day before the ex-dividend, because that's when it gets fairly crazy.

But then if you were to try to pull out any real liquidity for a week or two after that, you would have to take small pieces. And also the money rotates out of STRC directly after. So you normally get about a 94-cent drop, which just ties in — and the math there is pretty simple: you make 95 cents if you get the dividend. So realistically a decent floor for them should be 99.04, because below that now you're actually getting a little bit higher yield. So anyway, you have an illiquidity problem right after the dividend. So that's not a problem if you're just willing to wait a month. But if you're moving in and out a lot more than that, then that becomes problematic.

So what that also means is — you have to have emergency funds set aside in just regular old money market accounts that you can pull out on a day's notice or two days' notice, just in case of emergencies, or access to credit. By going to two weeks it would cut the volatility in half. So you would no longer need to wait 45 days to two months from your cash, and you could get in and get out a lot quicker.

Phong Le: “The last thing, if you're a holder of Stretch, we're actually going to make it even better. We're going to go from paying once a month to paying twice a month, everything else being equal. And so we're going from 12 payments a year to 24 a year, which effectively it's the same product, same note, double the frequency, an octave higher. It would make us the only semi-monthly instrument in the world in terms of equities. And of course, we know that there are others out there now, SATA, who's doing great innovation on a much smaller scale. They're about $500 million. We're about ten and a half billion, but still very respectable. They're actually moving to daily. So if you're a holder, please go vote. We have a vote that's going to end on June 7th.”
